

Photo by: Jocie

The way that you thought outside of the box and tilted the camera really helped this picture be less boring. The shadows and texture in this image really makes it pop.

Photo by: Autumn

Although the rule of thirds wasn't used very well in this photo, The dark plain wall contrasts with the spider and the texture makes it pop. I also love how you can see the shadow of the spider's legs. It helps show where the light is coming from.

Photo by: Caitlyn

I really really love this picture! The blurred background makes the face of this sunbathing reptile pop. I love the cool colors used in this. The texture and angle make it look super cool.

Photo by: Gracie

I love how you didn't fill the entire frame with this image. It is just barely off-set. The crisp, clearness of the image brings it to life. I love how the color of the apple pops out and the texture is clearly visible. The blurred background also helps focus your attention on the monkey. Great picture!